THIS EDITION.

THE high authority allowed to the works of Dr Adam, by classical scholars, and the teachers of the more eminent schools of Great Britain, supersedes the necessity of speaking of the merit or utility of the present publication. The beginning of the Latin and English Dictionary is considerably reduced in size from the large work in which the author had long been engaged; the middle part is nearly the same as in the former edition; and the latter part is shortened, on the general principle adopted by the Editor. It is therefore presumed, that the whole will be found tolerably uniform, and well suited to the use, not only of younger, but likewise of more advanced students. ;

The want of an English and Latin Dictionary, and an Index of Proper Names, is now supplied; and in order to direct the judgment and form the taste in the composition of Latin, synonymous words have been carefully distinguished, and numerous phrases produced, from the best authors, to ascertain the different shades of their signification. In executing this task, the Editor acknowledges his obligations to Baret's Alvearium, Robertson's Phraseologia Generalis, Ausonius Popma de Differentiis Verborum, Dumesnil's Synonymes, and Crombie's Gymnasium.

It is intended to put to press, as soon as possible, the Thesaurus, the result of the etymological labours of the Author, in 2 vols. 4to. on a new type, of a large size; and also a small Latin and English Dictionary, for the use of the lower forms, left in a finished state, and apparently the groundwork of the author's researches.

ADVERTISMENT

THIS EDITION.

The high authority allowed to the works of Mr Adam, by classical scholars, and the teachers of the more eminent schools of Great Britain, superseded the necessity of speaking of the merit or utility of the present publication. The decision of the Latin and English Dictionary is considerably reduced in size from the large work in which the author had long been engaged; the middle part is shortened as in the former edition; and the latter part is shorter, and on the general principle adopted by the Editor. It is therefore presumed, that the whole will be found tolerably improved, and well suited to the use, not only of younger, but likewise of more advanced students.

The want of an English and Latin Dictionary, and an Index of Proper Names, is now supplied; and in order to direct the judgment and form the taste in the composition of Latin, synonymous words have been carefully distinguished, and various phrases extracted from the best authors, to ascertain the different shades of their signification. In executing this task, the Editor acknowledges his obligations to Mr. Thomas, Robertson's Vocabulary of German and Latin, and to Mr. Thomas's Vocabulary of Latin and English.

It is intended to put to press, as soon as possible, the second volume, the result of the chronological labour of the Author, in 2 vols. 4to. on a new type, of a large size; and also a small Latin and English Dictionary; for the use of the lower classes, left in a finished state, and appearing the work of the author's researches.

P R E F A C E

TO THE FIRST EDITION.

THE compiler of the following pages intended a much larger work than the present; but being discouraged from executing his design, by the high price of paper and printing, he resolved, in the mean time, to publish an abridgement for the use of learners: and, to render it useful also to more advanced Students, he has intermingled a fuller explication of such words, as appeared most important or difficult. Afraid, however, of increasing the book too much, he at first enlarged on very few words.—For the sake of brevity, the infinitive only of easy verbs is inserted, and the nouns derived from them, when the meaning is obvious, are marked by contraction: so likewise in the case of adverbs derived from adjectives and participles. These and other such abbreviations will be easily understood by the reader, who is supposed to be previously acquainted with the principles of grammar. The present of the infinitive, rather than the first person of the present of the indicative, is inserted, as answering best to the English, and because from it derivatives are usually formed. When there is any difficulty in the conjugation of a verb, its preterite and supine are marked; except in those compound verbs, which agree in conjugation with their primitives. A few names of gems, plants, and insects, which rarely occur, are omitted.

The compiler perceiving, as he proceeded, the utility of more copious illustrations, and that most of them might be included within moderate bounds, introduced them afterwards more frequently; and, in the latter part of the book, has enlarged almost on every word according to its importance: on several of them, nearly as much as he proposed in his larger work. He has endeavoured carefully to distinguish the different meanings of words, and to explain them by the most pertinent examples. When the various significations of a word could not easily be reduced to distinct heads, he has, with much pains, arranged the examples alphabetically.—In order to connect the knowledge of words and things together, whenever a beautiful moral sentiment occurred, or an allusion is made to a remarkable custom, to an historical fact, or the like, the whole sentence is transcribed, and if difficult, explained. When the example refers to any thing of peculiar importance to the idiom of the Latin language, it is farther illustrated by quoting similar passages from various authors. On this part of the work the compiler has bestowed the utmost attention, and hopes it will be found useful to readers of every description. Any one, who takes the trouble of examining only a few of the words, on which he has enlarged, and of comparing them with those in Ainsworth, or indeed in any other dictionary the compiler has met with, will perceive the pains he has taken, and how much still remains to be done, to facilitate the perusal of the Latin classics. If the public approve of the specimen, which he has here given, he will endeavour to complete his larger work to the best of his ability.

He has, as usual, borrowed with freedom, whatever he judged fit for his purpose. To enumerate the various authors he has consulted, would be tedious and useless. He has been indebted chiefly to Cooper and Ainsworth, to Gesner's edition of R. Stephani Thesaurus, to the Lexicon of Facciolati and Forcellini, to the Indexes of Burmannus, Cellarius, Ernesti, and the editors of the classics Ad usum Delphini.

The diphthongs ae and oe are printed without contraction, as they are found in ancient manuscripts, and as they are printed by several of the best modern editors, Gesner, Ernesti, Heynè, and Jani.—The compiler proposed to have subjoined two Appendices of proper names; the one containing the names of places, and the other of persons: but that being impracticable in this volume, he must refer the reader, for information on those subjects, to his Geographical Index, and Classical Biography.

It is now near four years since the printing of this book was begun. The delay has been occasioned by the difficulty of the work, and by making various alterations and additions.—Great care has been taken to correct the press; and considering the minute nature of the work, it is hoped that few typographical mistakes of any consequence will be found. For this, as for other favours, the compiler is much indebted to a friend, distinguished for his accuracy and classical taste, Professor DALZEL, who has been so obliging, as to read over with critical attention, all the sheets as they were printed, except a few: and he embraces, with great pleasure, this opportunity of acknowledging his obligations to that learned gentleman, for his kind assistance in revising and correcting occasionally all his former works, for above thirty years.

Particular attention has been paid to mark with accuracy the quotations from the classics, and from the best editions.—The editions of prose authors most frequently consulted, are the following; Cicero, by Ernesti and Verburgius: in Cicero's epistles ad Familiares, when the epistle is long, the subdivisions are marked from the edition of Cortius:—so in Pliny's epistles, from the editions of Cellarius, Cortius, and Longolius: Livy, by Drackenborch, Ruddiman, Crevier, and Ernesti: Sallust, by Cortius: Caesar, Cornelius Nepos, Florus, and Justin cum notis ad usum Delphini: Velleius Paterculus, cum notis Variorum: Tacitus, by Brotier, and Ernesti: Cato, Varro, Columella, and the other writers de re rusticâ, by Gesner: Suetonius, by Pitiscus, and Ernesti: Quintilian, by Gesner: Celsus, by Targa, with the excellent Index of G. Matthias: Pliny, by Franzius, Leipsic, 1778; and by Brotier, Paris, 1779. As this author has been very often quoted, not only the books and chapters are marked, but likewise the section, and sometimes also the subdivisions of the section, according to Hardouin.

The editions of the poets, which have been chiefly consulted, are, Plautus, by Gronovius and Ernesti, Terence, by Westerhovius, Lucretius, by Creech; Virgil, by Ruacus, and Heynè; Horace, by Gesner, and Jani; Ovid, by Knippingius, and Burmunnus; Tibullus, by Broukhusius, Catullus and Propertius, by Vulpius; Lucan, by Burmunnus, Cortius, and cum notis Variorum, Juvenal and Persius, ad usum Delphini; Silius Italicus, by Cellarius; Martial, ad usum Delphini, and cum notis Variorum.

The following abbreviations and marks are often used; m. for the middle; f. for finis, the end; v. for vel, or for verse; s. for seu, or for section; vid. for vide, see; q. v. for quod vide, which see; i. e. for id est, that is; cf. for confer or conferas, compare:—A. for Roman Antiquities; G. for Geography, B. for Biography, &c.—* before a word denotes it to be of Greek origin: * or ✕ before a sentence shews that it deserves to be remarked: † before a word, denotes that it is used only by the Poets: and ‡ before a word, that it is not classical.

LEXICON

COMPENDIARIUM.

A

A is the first letter of the alphabet in all languages. A, among the Romans, was called LITERA SALUTARIS, as being put for absolvo, and marked on the tablet or ballot, which each judex or jury-man put into an urn, when he voted for the acquittal of a criminal, (A. 267.) In the comitia, or assemblies of the people, A was marked on one of the two tablets, which were given to each citizen in voting about the passing of a law, or any ordinance, and denoted ANTIQUO, i. e. ANTIQUA PROBO, sc. negotia, I am against the law, (A. 93.)

A, Ab, Abs, praep. cum abl. from, by. A is used only before words beginning with a consonant: Ab before words beginning with a vowel or consonant: Abs, before q and t, and sometimes s; in composition, before c and t; as abscedo, abstineo, &c.——a Tenedo; a terra ad coelum: talos a vertice pulcher ad imos, from top to toe, from head to foot, Hor. Ep. 1, 14, 11. mihi alterum (one) ex duobus eruit lumen, Quinct. 6. proœm. 6.—eodem modo de Aristotele et Isocrate judico; quorum uterque suo studio delectatus, contempsit alterum, the other, Cic. Off. 1, 1. non vides solem deum esse, Lunamque, quorum alterum (the one) Apollinem Graeci, alteram (the other) Dianam putant, Id. N. D. 3, 20. so ad Herenn. 3, 20. Syll. 21. certatim alter alteri obstrepere, bawled out the one against the other, Liv. 1, 40. quum alter alterum videremus, Cic. Fin. 3, 2. so Cic. N. D. 2, 29. Plaut. Truc. 2, 4, 30. Liv. 5, 11. Suet. Cal. 56. Plin. 11, 30. Senec. Ep. 7. alter ab altero adjutus, Cic. Br. 1. noxii ambo alter in alterum causam conferunt, Liv. 5, 11. ut altera altera non contingant sc. mala v. poma, that they may not touch one another, Col. 12, 45, 1. ille alter, the or that other, Ter. Eun. 2, 3, 8.—* We sometimes find alterae in the dat. sing. fem. Ter. Heaut. 2, 3, 80. Phor. 5, 7, 35. Plaut. Rud. 3, 4, 45. Nep. 18, 1.—alteris castris pervenit ad oppidum, by two encampments, i. e. in two days, Curt. 3, 7, 5. alteris jam literis nihil ad me de Attica, sc. scribis, in these last two letters, Cic. Att. 13, 22. ayrea mala decem misi; cras altera mittam, other ten apples, Virg. Ecl. 3, 71. so Cic. Fam. 4, 14, § 3, 9. Varr. R. R. 1, 17, 1. 2, 2, 7.—* When alter, repeated, refers to two words going before, the first alter is applied to the former word, and the second to the latter; as, Cic. Off. 1, 26. Fam. 7, 3. Vell. 2, 61. but not always; as, Cic. Off. 1, 12. § 2, 16, § 18. Quint. 1. Rosc. Com. 6. Plin. Ep. 6, 8. Quinct. 9, 2, 6. Liv. 22, 57. &c.—Sometimes in place of the second alter, the proper name is repeated; as, Cic. Fin. 3, 30.

ALTER is commonly applied to two who are equal; when any inferiority is expressed, secundus is used; as, Nep. 4, 3.

ALTER is often put for alius; as, Cic. ad Brut. 4. Tusc. 2, 17. Fam. 6, 3. § 4, 14. Off. 1, 21. Tusc. 5. extr. Lael. 21.—And for diversus or dissimilis; as, sperat infestis, metuit secundis alteram sortem, a different lot, a change of fortune, Hor. Od. 2, 10, 14. quoties te speculo videris alterum, changed, ib. 4, 10, 6.—also for secundus or similis; as, conditor alter urbis CAMILIUS, a second founder, like to Romulus, Liv. 3, 49. Amilcar, Mars alter, ib. 21, 10. Verres, alter Orcus, a second Pluto, Cic. Verr. 4, 50. alter Verres, ib. 33. me sicut alterum parentem observat, a second parent, Id. Fam. 5, 8. altera patria, altera Roma, Flor. 2, 6, 42. § 3, 5, 15. est enim is amicus quidem, qui est tanquam alter idem, a second self, Cic. Amic. 21. so alter ego, Id. Att. 4, 1. Pompeius omnia (sc. secundum, in all things,) me alterum se fore dixit, Cic. Fam. 2, 15, 7. 5. Att. 3, 1. Ad Brut. Ep. 15 pr. sollicitudinem quasi pro me altero patior, as for a second self, Plin. Ep. 2, 9 pr. cedat in altera jura, i. e. in alterius jura, falls under the power of another, Hor. Ep. 2, 2, 174.—altera die, quam a Brundisio solvit, in Macedoniam trajecit, on the second day after, Liv. 31, 14. alteris te mensis adhibet Deum, admits thee to the second table, or, as we say, to the second course, Hor. Od. 4, 5, 31. (see R. A. 454.) Id autem est genus ex tribus partibus collocationis alterum, the second, Cic. Orat. 52. but cum te Pompeius alteri alae praefecisset, Id. Off. 2, 13. the same with Uni, Nep. 18, 13. altero quoque die vinum vel aquam bibere, every other or second day, Cels. 4, 12. so 3, 13, § 23. ut primo die—ut alter dies—ut tertius dies, Cic. Verr. 1, 7. dies unus, alter, plures, ib. 4, 29. primus, alter, tertius, Id. Partit. 9. so Id. N. D. 3, 21. Phil. 1, 13. Cluent. 64. Verr. 2, 76. Fortunate puer, tu nunc eris alter ab illo, next after him, Virg. E. 5, 49. so alter ab undecimo jam tum me ceperat annus, the twelfth, ib. 8, 39; but Servius makes it the thirteenth. So some make altero vicesimo die, on the 22d day, Cic. Fam. 12, 25. as the author of the dialogue on Oratory, c. 40. Thus Suetonius says, obiit (sc. Nero) secundo et trigesimo aetatis anno, c. 57; and Eutropius speaking of the same thing says, obiit trigesimo et altero aetatis anno, 7, 15. so Cic. Mil. 35. Suet. Tit. 11. Col. 12, 41, 1. § 5, 6, 23; but about this commentators differ.—qui regnabat alter (second) post Alexandriam conditam, i. e. Ptolemaeus Philadelphus, the son of Lagos, Cic. Off. 2, 23. accessit amans unus et item alter, one or two, i. e. several, Ter. And. 1, 1, 50. so unus et alter dies intercesserat, several days, Cic. Cluent. 26. jamque dies, alterque dies processit, Virg. Æ. 3, 556. pretium aetas altera sordet, a second life, living over again, Hor. Ep. 1, 18, 18. Tarquinius numero centuriarum alterum tantum adjevit, as much again, i. e. doubled them, Liv. 1, 36, as Aurelius Victor expresses it, de Illustr. vir. 6. alterum tantum ex Latino delectu ad-jaciebatur, the same number of Latins as of Romans, Liv. 8, 8. But this number is said to be double that of the Romans; thus, duae partes sociorum in exercitu, tertia civium fuit, Liv. 3, 32. so the Latins themselves complain, per omnes annos atque omnia bella duplici numero se militum equitumque fungi, Vell. 2, 15. so militibus ex praeda centenos binos asses, et alterum tantum centurionibus atque equitibus divisit, the double, Liv. 10, 46. pes, qui adhibetur ad numeros, partitur in tria; ut necesse sit partem pedis aut aequalem alteri parti, aut altero tanto, aut sequi esse majorem; in a poetic foot one half must be equal to the other, (as in a dactyl, where the two short syllables are equal to the long;) or as great again, or the double, (as in an Iambus, where the second syllable being long, is the double of the first, which is short;) or one half greater or longer, as in the Paeon, which consists of one long and three short, variously placed, and consequently the three short syllables are greater by one short syllable (sequi major) than the long, Cic. Orat. 56 & 64. altero tanto longior anfractus, as long again, or double in length, Nep. 18, 8. etiamsi alterum tantum perdendum est, as much again, Plaut. Epid. 3, 4, 81. so Bach. 5, 2, 66.

ΑΜΑΡΕ, adv. bitterly. See ΑΜΑΡΟΣ.

ΑΜΑΡΕ, to love, to be fond of, to regard with affection.—ΑΜΑΡΕ denotes a greater degree of affection than diligere; inter amare et diligere, hoc interest, quòd amare vim habet majorem, diligere autem est leviùs amare, Non. 5, 3. Clodius, tribunus plebis designatus, valde me diligit, vel (ut ἰμφορτικωτικῶν dicam) valde me amat, Cic. Ad Brut. Ep. 1. quis erat, qui putaret ad eum amorem, quem erga te habebam, posse aliquid accedere? tantum accessit, ut mihi nunc denique amare videar, antea dilexisse, Cic. Fam. 9, 14, 11. quem ego quum olim mutuò diligerem, ex hac officii societate amare ardentius coepi, Plin. Ep. 3, 9, 7.—(DILIGERE est quasi ex multis eligere, et egregium habere; amare autem est impetu quodam et cupiditate amplecti: diligimus propter virtutem et ex ratione, amamus propter voluptatem et ex appetitu. Diligere is to regard or esteem one with a rational affection on account of his virtue, learning or other accomplishments; amare, to regard with a passionate affection or fondness.)—But these distinctions are not always observed; thus, dilexi tum te, non tantum ut vulgus amicam, sed pater ut gnatos diligit et generos, Catull. 71, 3. amare autem nihil aliud est, nisi cum ipsam diligere quem ames, &c. Cic. Amic. 27.—* amare and diligere are sometimes joined: Archagatus, homo nobilis, qui a suis te amari, et diligi vellet, to be loved and esteemed, or regarded, Cic. Verr. 4, 23. so te semper amavi, dilexique, Id. Fam. 15, 7. nos admodum diligit, amplectitur, amat, Cic. Att. 1, 13 m. non quòd quemquam plus amem, aut plus diligam, eò feci, sed, &c. Ter. ARVUM, a field ploughed, but not sown; any field: arvum quod aratum, necdum satum est, Col. 2, 9. Varr. R. R. 1, 29, 1. so Festus; & Scholiast. Horat. Ep. 1, 16, 2. arvorum cultus, Virg. G. 4, 1. nunc locus arvorum ingenis, the proper place to treat of the nature of the different soils, Virg. G. 2, 177. externum patrio amicus arvum, more friendly than your native soil, Ovid. Met. 15, 444. arvum genitale, i. e. matrix equina, Virg. G. 3, 136. so Lucret. 4, 1105. optima putri arva solo, those fields are best which have a loose soil, Virgil. G. 2, 262.—zephyrique tepentibus arvis laxant arva sinus, the fields open their bosoms to the warm breezes of the west wind, i. e. at the approach of spring, are freed from the frost, ib. 330. exercetque frequens tellurem, atque imperat arvis, by frequent tilling makes the fields produce a plentiful crop, ib. 1, 99. Senec. Tranq. 14. quid dicam, jacto qui semine comminus arva insequitur, cumulosque ruit malè pinguis arenae, immediately falls on the fields and levels the heaps of barren sand, or breaks the hard ridges jutting up, ib. 104. cùm flavis messorem induceret arvis agricola, brought the reapers into the yellow fields, or set them to cut down the ripe corns, ib. 316. arva aliena jugo premere, to press with the yoke, to reduce to subjection a country not their own, Virg. Æ. 10, 78 f. florentia proterit arva, treads down the flourishing fields, i. e. the corns, Ovid. Met. 2, 791. ne perconteris, fundus meus—arvo pascat herum, sc. an, with its ploughed land or corn, Hor. Ep. 1, 16, 2. arva marte populata, laid waste by war, Id. Od. 3, 5, 24. squalent abductis arva colonis, lie uncultivated, Virg. G. 1, 507. sic quoque mutatis requiescunt foetibus arva, the fields rest by a change of grain, which in some measure answers the same end as letting them lie fallow, ib. 82. ante Jovem nulli subigebant arva coloni, tilled, ib. 125. Numidae pabulo pecoris magis quam arvo student, pay more attention to pasturage than agriculture, Sallust. Jug. 90.—Plautus uses ARVUS, thus, non arvus hic, sed pascuus est ager, Truc. 1, 2, 47. but here arvus seems to be an adjective, as pascuus. see Isidor. 15, 13.

ARX, arcis, f. (gen. pl. arcium,) a citadel or fortress: ab arcendo, quod is sit locus muratissimus urbis, a quo facillimè possit arceri hostis, Varr. L. L. 4, 32. vel per metathesin, ab arxos, summus, ἀρξος; whence this word is applied to mountains, Virg. G. 1, 212. & 2, 54. Sil. 3, 496. & 13, 305. Val. Flac. 4, 241. Lucan. 3, 231. also to heaven; Ovid. Met. 1, 162. Amor. 3, 10, 21. & ad Albiolan. v. Cl. Stat. Theb. 3, 246, 9.—But properly, arx est locus in civitate et munitus ad salutem omnium locus. Ascon. in Cic. Caecil. 5. so Serv. ad Virg. Æ. 3, 134. Tarpeia arx, Ib. 8, 652. arce ex summâ, from the citadel of Carthage, Ib. 4, 410. arx Athenarum, Nep. 22. Synacetus, Id. 20, 3. so Plin. 4, 11. minora castra inclusa majoribus, castelli atque arcis obtinebant locum, Caes. B. C. 3, 66.—Hence ARX is applied to every kind of refuge, or whatever we confide in; thus, arx omnium gentium, urbs Roma, Cic. Cat. 4, 6. arx omnium provinciarum, Africa, Id. Ligar. 7. in arce legis praesidia constituere defensionis meae non licet, Cic. Cluent. 57. arx sociorum (the security or protection, &c.) lex repetundarum est, Cic. Caec. 5. arx civium perditorum, Id. Pis. 5. arx amicorum suorum, the chief, Cic. Phil. 8, 8. arcem tu quidem Stoicorum defendis, the chief doctrine, Id. Divin. 1, 6. classis est arx commeatuum, Tac. Hist. 3, 13. arcem juris attingere, i. e. summum imperium tenere, Lucan. 7, 593. munite communem arcem bonorum, obstruite perfugia improborum, Cic. Sull. 28. cf. Pis. 5. constituere praesidia defensionis in arce legis, Cic. Cluent. 57. num potui magis in arcem illius causae invadere? could I have more attacked the fortress of that cause? could I have made a bolder attack on the party of Pompey and Caesar? Cic. Fam. 1, 9, 15.—But ARX is also put for the summit or top of any thing, height, pre-eminence: thus, celsa tu mentis ab arce despicias errantes, humanae gaudia rides, Stat. Silv. 2, 2, 131. Cicerone tum arcem eloquentiae tenente, being at the top of the bare Quinctil. 12, 11, 28. quae te via, fare, superbum ad decus, et summas laudum perduxit arces? Sil. 13, 770. ad arcem ostentationis operae pervenerunt, Plin. 35, 10 s. 36.—* protinus aërias Phaeacium abscondimus arces, we lose sight of, i. e. we pass the lofty promontories or mountains of the Phaeacians or Corcyra, Virg. Æ. 3, 291. festae Pallades arces, i. e. the citadel of Athens, Ovid. Met. 2, 713. sacrae arces, the sacred citadel, i. e. the capitol, Hor. Od. 1, 2, 3. arcem attollere tectis, to rear a citadel, Virg. Æ. 3, 134. Servius makes it, to build houses.—arceas attingit igneas, i. e. caelum, Ib. 3, 3, 10. arces Alpihus impositae, the citadels or forts built on the Alps, Ib. 4, 14, 11. montibus, Id. Ep. 2, 1, 252. cum lacerae aries balistaque concutit arces, shake the battered towers, Ovid. Met. 11, 509.

As vel ASSIS, assis, m. a pound, or any thing that may be divided into twelve parts; the name of a Roman coin.

ASSIPONDIUM, i, n. the weight of an AS or pound, Varr. L. L. 4, 26.—Decussis, is, m. 10 asses; se centesima, or hundred. The parts into which the AS is divided are, uncia, ac, f. an ounce; sextans, ntis, m. two ounces; quadrans, ntis, m. four ounces; triens, ntis, m. four ounces; quincunx, cis, m. five ounces; semissis, ntis, m. six ounces; septunx, cis, m. seven ounces; bes, bessis, m. eight ounces; dodrans, ntis, m. nine ounces; dextans, ntis, ten ounces; denunx, cis, m. eleven ounces — (I) ex asse heres, the heir of one's whole estate, Martial. 3, 10. Quintil. 7, 1, 20. ex triente, of the third; ex dodrante, of two-thirds, &c. — (II) the interest of money was also expressed by the parts of the AS; thus, when a whole AS was paid for the use of a hundred each month, it was called USURA CENTESIMA, because in a hundred months it equalled the original sum; or more frequently in the plural, usuræ centesimæ, i. e. as we call it, twelve per cent. per annum: so usuræ semisses, six per cent.; trientes, four per cent.; quadrantes, three per cent. &c. See USURA. — (IV) The AS was a brazen coin, at first weighing a pound. asse populo modium dare, a peck for an AS, Cic. Off. 2, 17. ad assem impendium reddes, you shall refund the expence to a penny, Plin. Ep. 1, 15. assem para, et auream accipe fabulam, prepare your penny, and hear a pleasant story; an AS used to be given by the hearers to a pleasant story-teller, lb. 2, 20. aestimare aliquid assis, Cat. 5, 2. emptum plus minus asse Caiano, at the lowest price; in allusion, as some think, to the AS, mutually exchanged in marriage, when the bridegroom called his bride CAIA, and she called him CAIUS (A. 466); or rather to the diminution of the weight of the AS by Caius Caligula, Stat. Silv. 4, 9, 22. unius assis non unquam pretio pluris licuisse, was never valued more than the worth of one penny, Hor. Sat. 1, 6, 13. miles collecta viatica multis aerumnis ad assem perdiderat, Id. Ep. 2, 2, 27. si comminuas (sc. immensum pondus auri atque argenti), vilem redigetur ad assem, to a poor or paltry penny, Id. Sat. 1, 1, 43. in triviis fixum quum se demittat ob assem, stoops for a farthing fixed in the streets by the boys, to impose on those who passed, Id. Ep. 1, 16, 64. so Pers. 5, 111.

ASA, a species put for ARA, Gell. 4, 3. Macrob. Sat. 3, 2.

* ASSARŌTON, i, n. (ex à priv. et ασσασ, verro.) a kind of pavement, made of small pebbles, or tiles died with different colours, where the crumbs or scraps which fall from the table, and such things as used to be swept away, seemed to be left, Plin. 36, 25 s. 60. Stat. Silv. 1, 3, 56.

* ASSĀRUM, i, n. wild spikenard, an herb, Plin. 12, 19. 21, 6 & 19.

* ASBESTĪNUM, i, n. (ἀσβεστον, inextinguibile, ex à priv. et σβεννυμι, extinguo.) according to Pliny, a kind of lint, found in the deserts of India, of which cloth was made, endued with the wonderful quality of remaining unconsumed in the fire, Plin. 19, 1 s. 4. But ASBESTOS is now known to be a fossil stone, divisible into small threads or filaments, of which the cloth is made. This fossil substance has been found in Anglesey, and in some parts of Scotland.

* ASBESTOS, a kind of precious stone, Plin. 37, 10 s. 34 m.

* ASBŪLOS, i, m. Soot, the name of a hog, so called from his colour, Ovid. Met. 3, 218.

* ASCALABŌTES, ac, m. a poisonous animal, a kind of lizard, Plin. 29, 4 s. 29.

* ASCALIA, ac, f. the pith or marrow of the herb Cactos, Plin. 21, 16 s. 57.

ASSERTIO tam a servitute in libertatem, quam a libertate in servitutem trahi significat, Priscian. 18. sitne liber qui in assertione est, while the question concerning his freedom is depending, Quinct. 3, 6, 56. ideo nec adsertionem denegandam iis, qui ex ejusmodi causâ in libertatem vindicabuntur, puto, that a claim of liberty should not be refused, Plin. Ep. 10, 72. This claim, although at first rejected, used to be brought a second time, (assertione secundâ,) Quinctil. 5, 2, 1. before other judges, Id. 11, 1, 78. or oftener. Such claims being not quite clear, were called PERFUSORIAE; and in favour of these (perfusoriis assertionibus,) Domitian advised the judges (recuperatores) not always to shew themselves too easy, (ne se semper accommodarent,) Suet. Dom. 8.

ASSERTIO is never found in the classics to denote an affirmation; the passage in Cicero, Acad. 1, 12. quoted as an authority, is read otherwise by the best editors.

ASSERTOR est vindex alienae libertatis, an asserter or defender, Donat. in Ter. Adel. 2, 1, 39. See Martial. 1, 53, 5. qui loquitur Curios, assertoresque Camillos, defenders of the public liberty, Id. 1, 25, 3.

Caecin. 10.* a malo auctore emere, to purchase from one who had not a complete right to the property which he sells, Cic. Verr. 5, 22. add. Plaut. Curc. 4, 2, 12. Senec. Contr. 21 & 34. to this Cicero alludes: is—auctor beneficii populi Romani esse debet, ought to secure the right of possession, (i. e. the consulship to Murena,) and bear the hazard of a trial, (periculum iudicii praestare.) Cic. Muren. 10.—(III) AUCTOR also denotes the guardian or curator of women and minors, (pupillorum,) who had the management of them and their affairs: nubere nullis auctoribus, without the authority or consent of parents, relations, guardians, &c. Id. Cl. 5.—(IV) AUCTOR is used in various other forms: auctoribus Dis ad rem gerendam proficiscimur, by the admonition or advice of the Gods, who have given favourable omens, Liv. 9, 14. so avibus auctoribus, Cic. Div. 1, 15. auctore eodem deo, i. e. monitu Serapidis dei, Tac. Hist. 4, 81. nemo civis Romanus aut libertatem aut civitatem potest amittere, nisi ipse auctor factus sit, unless he give his consent, Cic. Dom. 29. Pompeio auctore, by the advice or consent of, Id. Att. 1, 12. ille legibus Caecilii Metelli contra auspicia ferendis auctor, an adviser, Cic. Att. 8, 3. aderat furens miles, nullo duce, sibi quisque auctor, every one acting as he pleased, Tac. Hist. 3, 71. in antiquissimâ philosophiâ Cratippo auctore versaria, you are engaged in studying under C. as your teacher, Cic. Off. 2, 2. sunt, qui male pugnatum a his consulibus in Alcido, auctores sunt, who say, Liv. 4. so Plin. 7, 43, & 10, 56. malus auctor latinitatis, a bad authority or writer, Cic. Att. 7, 3.—citius nos corrumpunt vitiorum exempla domestica, magnis quum subeant animos auctoribus, by the authority of parents or guardians, Juv. 14, 32. quos hic noster auctores habet, our author has as his examples or authorities, Ter. And. Prol. 19. so Cic. de Or. 2, 37. Verr. 3, 96. id ita esse, ipsam rem auctorem dabo, I will shew or prove it by the thing itself, Plaut. Trin. 1, 2, 70.—(V) AUCTOR occurs in the feminine, Virg. Æ. 12, 159. Ovid. Fast. 5, 191. & 6, 709. Ep. 15, 3. & 14, 110. Cic. Div. 1, 15, &c.

AUCTRIX, icis, f. is used by some later writers, but does not occur in the classics.

AUCTORITAS is used in nearly as many different senses as AUCTOR: it denotes in general that influence which one has from age, wisdom, wealth, virtue, dignity, power, or the like. AUTHORITY is a peculiar attribute of the Roman senate; (potestas in populo, auctoritas in senatu sit, Cic. Legg. 3, 12.) Sext. 65. and expresses the power of that order, which was different at different periods of the state, Liv. 1, 17. (A. 20.) but AUCTORITAS SENATUS is also put for SENATUS CONSULTUM, a decree of the Senate; thus, Senatus vetus auctoritas de Bacchanalibus, Cic. Leg. 2, 15. so Id. Fam. 1, 2. Off. 3, 30. when the tribunes of the commons interposed their negative, (intercedebant,) Cic. Fam. 8, 8, 18.—sometimes auctoritas senatus simply signifies the will of the senate; as, C. Flaminius agrum Picenum contra auctoritatem senatûs viritum dividebat, Cic. Sen. 4. or an opinion of its wisdom, Id. Cluent. 55. Phil. 3, 5. Dom. 19.—(II) AUCTORITÄS is sometimes applied also to the people; as, citra senatûs populique auctoritatem, without, Suet. Caes. 28.—cedere auctoritati senatûs, to submit to the decree or authority of the senate, Liv. 4, 57. non esse in auctoritate senatûs, not to submit to it, ib. 56. so se in auctoritate Tarentinorum manere, submitted to the determination of, Liv. 9, 14.—(III) auctoritas antiquitatis, Quinct. 1, 6, 39. audientium, the dignity or respectability, Id. 12, 5, 1. deorum, Quinctil. 12, 10, 8. frontis, Quinctil. 12, 5, 5.—Pliny uses auctoritas for the value or estimation in which a thing is held; as, quibus vinis auctoritas fuerit, 14, 14 s. 17. tanta ebori auctoritas erat, 12, 4 s. 8. 29, 6 s. 39. 32, 2 s. 11. 33, 7 s. 38. so also Varr. R. R. 2, 5, 3.—AUCTORITAS sometimes is referred to that kind of external appearance, which commands respect.—AUCTORITATES praescriptae, (al. perscriptae), the names of those senators who staid to see the decree of the senate written out, (qui scribendo adfuerunt), which were prefixed to the decree, Cic. de Or. 3, 2. Fam. 8, 8, 12.—auctoritates publicae, public papers or documents, written out and sealed, to prove some fact, Cic. I. Act. Verr.—testibus auctoritatibus convincitur, by authentic proofs, Cic. Verr. 5, 39 f. pilis et gladiis, non consiliis neque auctoritatibus de jure publico disceptatur, not by opinions, Cic. Fam. 6, 1. so nostrae auctoritates, my opinions, Id. Cluent. 50.—AUCTORITAS ab oratoribus vel historicis peti solet, the authority for using a word, Quinctil. 1, 6, 2. repetere auctoritatem a plurimis versibus, to take an authority or example, Id. 3, 11, 39.—AUCTORITAS, among lawgivers, denotes the right of property or of claiming any thing as one's property; as, adversus hostem (i. e. a foreigner) aeterna auctoritas esto, let the right of claiming the property of any thing against a foreigner be perpetual; that is, a foreigner can by no length of possession, or prescription, as it is called, secure the property of any thing against the claims of a Roman citizen, Cic. Off. 1, 12. so Gell. 17, 7, usûs auctoritas fundi biennium est, i. e. auctoritas fundi ex usucapione biennii paratur, the property of a farm is acquired among citizens by the undisputed possession of it for two years, Cic. Top. 4. lex usum, et auctoritatem (the right of property derived from use or possession) jubet esse biennium, Cic. Caecin. 19. so that usûs auctoritas, and usus et auctoritas, signify the same thing.—aquaeductus, haustus, iter, actus, a patre, (sc. relinquuntur;) sed rata auctoritas harum rerum omnium a jure civili sumitur, the secure or certain property, Cic. Caecin. 26.

AUCTÖRÄRE, vel Auctoräri, (dep.) to sell one's self for hire, chiefly to fight as a gladiator; rarely used except in the participle perfect.—AUCTORAMENTUM, i, n. wages or hire given to induce one to fight as a gladiator, or to do any other service: quid refert uri virgis, ferroque necari AUCTORATUS eas? sc. an, what difference does it make as to your being a slave, whether you be bound, &c. Hor. Sat. 2, 7, 59. eo pignore velut auctoratum sibi esse proditorem ratus, bound, Liv. 37, 10. est enim in illis (sc. sordidis quaestibus, in mean trades,) ipsa merces, AUCTORAMENTUM servitutis, their wages is the price at which they sell themselves for slaves, Cic. Off. 1, 42. jugulati civis auctoramentum, the reward given by Sylla for butchering a citizen, Paterc. 2, 28. auctoramento funebri ad conservatoris quondam reipublicae tantique consulis (sc. Ciceronis) irritare necem, said of Antony, ib. 66.

AUCTUS, ûs, m. an increase, &c. See AUGERE.

AUCUPARI, to fowl; AUCUPIUM, fowling, &c. See AUCEPS.

AUDĒRE, (audeo, ausus), to dare: audere majora viribus, to attempt, Virg. Æ. 10, 811. praelium, Tac. Ann. 19, 36. scelus aliquid, Ovid. Ep. 14, 6. ultima, Liv. 2, 2. vim cultoribus ac oppidanis, ac—navicularios audebant, Tac. Ann. 12, 55. non ausis aciem hostibus, not daring to fight, Tac. Ann. 12, 32 & 28. nihil ultra fremitum et minas ausus, Id. Hist. 1, 15. ausurosque nocturnam castrorum oppugnationem, Id. Ann. 2, 12. ultionem ausus dubiis rebus, ib. 62. audendum dextrâ, Virg. Æ. 9, 320. auctor audendi, ib. 12, 159. audendi majora fidem fecere immensae vires, gave Caesar confidence to attempt, Lucan. 1, 462. pic-toribus atque poetis quidlibet audendi semper fuit aequa potestas, Hor. Art. P. 9.—(II) AUDEO is sometimes used in the passive: thus, multa dolo, pleraque per vim audebantur, Liv. 29, 9. si animadvertent, auderi (impers. sc. ab Atheniensibus, for Athenienses audere,) adversus se tam exiguis copiis dimicare, Nep. 1, 4. hence AUSUS has also a passive sense; ausi omnes immane nefas, ausoque potiti, they all attempted horrid wickedness, and accomplished what they attempted, Virg. Æ. 6, 624. so ausis ad Caesarem codicillis, having ventured or presumed to send, Tac. Ann. 3, 67. hence AUSUM, i, n. sc. negotium, a thing dared, an attempt: ausi nullius capax natura, ib. 13, 47. auso foret ille potitus, would have succeeded in his enterprise, Ovid. Met. 11, 942. fortia ausa, Virg. Æ. 9, 281. ausa crudelia, Ovid. Ep. 14, 49. magnis tamen excidit ausis, he failed in a great attempt, Ovid. Met. 2, 328. AUDENS, ntis, a. daring; audentes fortuna juvat, assists the brave, Virg. Æn. 10, 283. so Ovid. Metam. 10. 586. tu ne cede malis, sed contra audentior ito, Virg. Æn. 6, 95. audentissimus quisque, Tac. Agric. 33. audentior oratio, poetical, Dial. de Or. 14. inde Syriam audentioribus spatiis petebat, through a more dangerous part of the sea, by a bolder voyage, Tac. Hist. 2, 2.—ceteri audentius circumstistere, ib. 78. so Ann. 4, 47.—AUDENTIA, ae, f. boldness: nec defuit audentia Druso, boldness, courage, Tac. Germ. 34. rara et privata cujusque auden- ita, b. 21. ne quisque audientiae habuisset, sc. plerumque, Id. Ann. 15, 53. si datur Haecero consilio contrahere, extolere, indolere; cur tibi sumis audientia—negatus? facilem, Plin. Ep. 8, 4.

AUDAX, a. bold; animus audax, daring. Sallust. Cat. 5. audax omnia perpeti Gens Romana, Hor. Od. 1, 2, 25. audacibus annue corpis, justify my bold attempt, Virg. G. 1, 49. audacior ad laevis, sc. salito, uncommonly bold or daring to commit, Cic. Cat. 2, 5. audacissimus ego ex omnibus, Id. Rosc. Am. 1.—audaciora verba sc. aequo, too bold, i. e. poetical expression, Quintil. 10, 5, 4.

AUDACITER, AUDACITER, & ABDACITER, adv. boldly: habet ut q. illam molestissima diuinitiae perversitate, ut AUDACITER potius dicant, quam ABDACITER, licet omnes oratores aliud sequantur, Quintil. 1, 6, 17. AUDACITER, however, is retained by the best editors, in Cic. Rosc. Am. 34. Cael. 6. Sen. 22. Liv. 22, 25 & 40. dicere Iberis atque audaciis, Caes. B. G. 1, 18. audacissimè prorumpere, ib. 5, 15. & 2, 10. Liv. 30, 30.

AUDACIA, ae, f. boldness, courage, bravery: animus paratus ad periculum, si suâ cupiditate, non utilitate communi impellitur, audaciae potius nomen habeat, quam fortitudinis, Cic. Off. 1, 19. audacia et audentia hoc differunt; quod audentia fortitudinis est; audacia, temeritatis, Non. 5, 84. but this observation does not always hold: in the example which Nenius quotes, (audacia pro muro habetur,) audacia denotes courage or bravery, Sallust. Cat. 58. so deabus his artibus audaciâ in bello, ubi pax evenerat, aequitate, &c. ib. 9. ceteris audaciam addere, Id. Jug. 94. so Propert. 2, 10, 5. in general, however, audacia is taken in a bad sense; thus, imitatur fortitudinem audacia, audacity, Cic. Partit. 23.—audacia callida, immanis, impudens, ingens, petulans, praeceps, singularis, &c.

AUDIRE, (audio, i, i, tum,) to hear: ab auribus videntur dicta audio et ausulto, Varr. L. L. 5, 8. liquidius audiunt talpae, Plin. 10, 69.—clarissimè audire produntur, mugil, lupus, salpa, pisces, ib. 70. parum auribus audire Cato, R. R. 157. si mihi pergat, quae vult, dicere, ea quae non vult audiet, Ter. And. 5, 4, 17. et breviter Trojae supremum audire laborem, i. e. breviter enarratum, a short relation of, Virg. Æ. 2, 11. audire Socratem aut Platonem, to hear, i. e. to be scholar of, Cic. Acad. 1, 9. Nat. D. 1, 14. Off. 1, 1. audiendi studiosus ex hoc enim disci facillimè arbitrat, Nep. 15, 3.—(II) AUDIO is also applied to inanimate things; as, neque audit currus habenas, the chariot, i. e. the horses do not regard the reins, Virg. G. 1, 513. nec quae magis audeat arcum, sc. sagitta, which would more obey the bow, i. e. would fly as it was directed, Ovid. Met. 5, 382. arma cessant, teque languenti manu non audit arcus, Senec. Herc. Act. 975. hence arcus surdus, Stat. Theb. 9, 864. clavum audire negantem, a rudder which cannot be managed for the storm, ib. 5, 412. dirigit huc puppim miseri quoque dextra Telonis, qua nullam mellâs, pelago turbante, carinae audire remam, detours at managing the rudder, Luc. 3, 24. si quod tardus non it verus, if any person is slow to do so, Id. 9, 931.—(III) AUDIO is used in various senses, according to the mood, as follows.

AUDIRE, a. e, et, et de oblique, to hear from any one; saepe hoc audivi de patre et de socio meo, from Cic. de Or. 2, 3. so Ter. 13. Off. 1, 30. Ter. And. 3, 1, 2. Est audire de aliquo, or de aliquo re, commonly signifies to hear of or concern; as, cum de te ex te ipso audierim, Cic. Tusc. 2, 11, 2.—AUDIO (I hear or understand) is elegantly used when we grant something to an opponent, Cic. Verr. 2, 59 & 60. Rosc. Am. 18. or when one simply assents, Ter. Eun. 2, 3, 78. or ironically, when one disapproves of what is said, Id. Phorm. 1, 3, 8. non audio, I reject what you have said, Cic. Verr. 3, 34. ponere aliquid, ad quod te audiam, sc. dicere, to propose some question on which I may hear you speak, Cic. Fat. 2 f. si me audes, vitabis inimicitias, if you will take my advice, Cic. Fam. 2, 18. nec audiendi quidam, ought they to be regarded, Quintil. 3, 3, 4. so Cic. Amic. 15. si fabulas audire volumus, to credit or believe, Cic. Tusc. 1, 58. nec Homerum audio, Ib. 26. P. Sempronium civem vestrum non audistis, arma capere, ac se jubentem sequi; Annibalem paulo post audistis, castra prodi, et arma tradi jubentem, obeyed, Liv. 22, 60. non sum audurus, NON ERAM ROMAE, vel OCCUPATOR TRAM, I will not admit these excuses, Plin. Ep. 2, 2. audietur a populo vir primarius, eques Romanus, L. Flavius, his evidence as a witness will be regarded or he will be believed, Cic. Verr. 1, 5.—BENE aut MALE AUDIRE, to be well or ill spoken of, to have a good or bad character, to be praised or blamed; thus, benedictis si certasset, audisset bene, sc. a nobis, he should have been commended, Ter. Phorm. prol. 20. so 2, 3, 12. est hominis ingenui et liberaliter educati, velle bene audire a parentibus, Cic. Fin. 3, 17. so Id. Legg. 1, 19. Tusc. 5, 40. Verr. 3. mater appellabitur; neque unquam illa ita de suo scelere et immanitate audiet, ut naturae nomen amittat, so blamed for or accused of, Cic. Cluent. 5. saepe verecundum laudasti, rexque, paterque, audisti coram, nec verbo parcius absens, have been called to your face or in your presence, Hor. Ep. 1, 7, 37. tu rectè vivis, si curas esse, quod audis, what you are called or are said to be, ib. 1, 16, 7.—(IV) AS AUDIRE is sometimes put for INTELLIGERE, so it also signifies to understand, or to supply some word or words purposely omitted in a sentence; as, hoc nomine (iniquos) donârunt ea, quae non dicunt, verum intelligi volunt, ut in eum quem saepius a ludo (sc. gladiatorio) redemerat soror, agentem cum ea talionis, (bringing an action of retaliation against her,) quod ei pollicem dormienti recidisset, eras dignus, ut haberes integram manum. sic enim auditur, (i. e. subintellige vel supple,) ut depugnares, Quintil. 8, 5, 12.—Plautus sometimes uses AUDIO for au-diam, Poen. 1, 2, 97. Capt. 3, 4, 86. see Non. 9, 11.—In the time of Quintilian AUDISSE was rather used than AUDIVISSE, 1, 6, 17. but both occur in the best authors, as Cicero observes concerning nōsse and judicāsse, Orat. 47 pr.—AUDIENS is sometimes used as a substantive: thus, animum audientis movere, of the hearer, Cic. Orat. 17. animos audientium permovere, Id. Brut. DICTO AUDIENTEM ESSE, to be obedient, is always followed by another dative; which is a remarkable expression, as AUDIO itself is never so construed: thus, ego sum Jovi dictor, audiens, Plaut. Amph. 3, 4, 6.—Hac re AUDITA, Nep. 2, 4. hoc non audiam, sed cognitum praedicamus, this we affirm, not from hearsay, but from personal knowledge, Nep. 25, 13 f. carmina non prius audita canto, verses not before heard at Rome, as Horace was the first Roman lyric poet, Hor. Od. 3, 1, 3. hujus audita virtus, heard of, Cic. Balb. 6 f. Romae cuncta in deterius audita Mutianumangebant, Tac. Hist. 4, 19. audita recordari, Virg. Æ. 3, 107. repetere, to recollect, Ovid. Ep. 19, 193.—AUDITO in the ablative is sometimes used absolutely; thus, ipse, audito castellum Luppiae flumini appositum obsideri, sex legiones eō duxit, having heard; and the following part of the sentence is to be considered as the substantive, with which AUDITO agrees, Tac. Ann. 2, 7. so ib. 14. 7. Liv. 27, 7. & 34, 9. post victoriam audito crudelior Sulla, than was ever heard of, Vell. 2, 25. vidistin' an de audito nuncias, from hearsay or report, Plaut. Merc. 5, 2, 62. so Id. Bacch. 3, 3, 65. ex auditis, Lucr. 5, 1132. nihil praeter auditum habeo, Cic. Off. 1. 10 f.

AUDITUS, ūs, m. the sense of hearing, and sometimes the act.—auditus (i. e. sensus audiendi) cui hominum primò negatus est, huic et sermonis usus ablati, Plin. 10, 69 s. 88. auditus semper patet, the sense of hearing, Cic. N. D. 2, 57. vereor ne hoc quod dicam, non perinde intelligi auditu possit, atque ego ipse cogitans sentio, by hearing or by being heard, Cic. Marcell.—brevi auditu quamvis magna transibat Vitellius, passed them over with a short hearing, i. e. did not mind them, Tac. Hist. 2, 57.—AUDITIO, ōnis, f. the act of hearing, a report, auditione expetere coepit, sc. signum Cereris, cum id ipse non vidisset, by report, Cic. Verr. 4, 46.

AUDIENTIA, ae, f. an audience: audientiam facere praeconem jussit, to make a hearing, i. e. to produce silence, Liv. 43, 16. exsurge, praeconem, fac populo audientiam, bid the people be silent and attentive, Plaut. Poen. prol. 11 f. facit persaepe ipsa sibi audientiam deserti senis comita et mitis oratio, gains attention, Cic. Sen. 9. cf. Cic. Caecil. 13. de Orat. 2, 80. Heren. 4, 54.

AUDITOR, ōnis, m. a hearer; semper ego auditor tantum, nunquamne reponam? must I always hear poets repeat their verses, and never reply? Juvenal. 1, 1. de gloriā nisi tibi, sc. meos libros v. librum. custodies igitur, ut so- les: sed notentur eclogarii, (sc. loci, the choice passages, quos Salvius bonos auditores nactus, having got a company of well disposed hearers,) in convivio duntaxat legat, Cic. Att. 16, 2.—(II) Initio contumeliae causā a deridentibus discipuli Latronis AUDITORES vocabantur; deinde in usu verbum esse coepit, et promiscue poni pro discipulo additor, Senec. Contr. 25. Strato auditor Theophrasti, the scholar, Cic. Acad. 1, 9. so Eudoxus Platonis auditor, Id. Div. 2, 42. praebebo me tibi attentum auditorem, Cic. N. D. 3, 1.—(III) calumnians auditor, a cavilling reader, Varr. L. L. 5, 1. because the Romans, instead of reading themselves, had slaves who read books to them.

AUDITORIUM, ii, n. a school, an assembly of hearers, an auditory: auditorium extrui, a place where one may read his verses or declaim to a number of hearers, Dial. de Orat. 9. ab auditoriis et theatris in forum et ad causas vocare, from the exercises of declamation to real business at the bar, ib. 10. non eadem est conditio fori et auditorii, the manner of speaking at the bar or in the forum, and in a rhetorical school, is not the same, Quintil. 10, 1, 36. Isocrates auditoriis se, non judiciis compararat, had fitted himself for declaiming in a school, not for pleading in a real trial, Id.

AVE, vel HAVE, aveto vel haveto, be thou safe, hail, all health to you; a form of salutation: plur.

AVĒTE, 2. pl. imper.

AVĒRE, a defective verb; found in no other part; for AVEO, ēre, to desire, is a different word.—* AVE, or SALVE, was the word commonly used in the morning salutation; as VALE was in the evening, Suet. Galb. 4. et matutinum portat ineptus ave, carries the morning salutation, Martial. 1, 56. 6. mane tibi pro me dicat avere liber, ib. 109, 10. ave Latinum, χαίρει non potest Graecum, he can pronounce the Latin word of salutation AVE, but not the Greek, Id. 5, 52 7.—AVE, or HAVE, was also used as a salutation to a person after a long absence; thus, Caesar, simul atque have mihi dixit, quid de te audisset, mihi exposuit, Cic. Fam. 8, 16, 8. see Martial. 9, 8. Gell. 15, 7.—We find, however, HAVETO put for VALETO, farewell, Sallust. Cat. 35. so have, Catull. 102, 8.—In the time of Quintilian AVĒTE had become obsolete, instead of which they used HAVETE, 1, 6, 21.

AVĒĒRE, (ēno, xi, ctum; ex a & veho, to carry away: is venit, ut secum avehat, sc. eam, Ter. Adel. 4, 5, 19. creditus avectos hostes & sc. navibus, are gone, or have sailed away, Virg. Æ. 2, 43. add. ib. 179. & 11, 205.

AVĒLLĒRE, (ello, elli, & ulsi, ulsum; ex a & vello,) to pull or tear away, to pluck off, to take away or carry off by force.

AVULSIO, ōnis, f. the act of pulling away: nascuntur omnia aut semine aut avulsione, all garden herbs are produced by seed, or by pulling a slip from the mother plant, Plin. 19, 7 s. 36 so 17, 10.—

AVULSOR, ōnis, m. he who tears away: ubi

avilorem sentiunt, contractae multo difficilius abstrahuntur, sc. spongiae, when they feel one pulling or plucking them off. Id. 9, 43 & 69.

AVĒNA, ae, f. oats,—metaph. a pipe.— AVĒNA commonly denotes wild oats, (STERILES AVĒNAE.) Virg. E. 5, 37. & G. 1, 154. which the ancients falsely imagined were produced by a degeneracy of wheat or barley, Plin. 18, 14 & 44. *Hence Servius on Virgil says that they were called STERILES, to distinguish them from those which were sown, ib. and were usually cut for fodder, Col. 2, 11, 9. They were sometimes made into meal; hence farina avinacea, oat-meal, Plin. 29, 6. and the people of Germany used no other pottage, (neque alia pulte vivunt,) Plin. 18, 17 & 44.—*cicada avenaria, a kind of cicada, which appears when the corn grows ripe, Plin. 11, 27 & 32.—As shepherds use to play on an oaten reed, hence AVĒNA is put for a pipe; thus, silvestrem tenui musam meditaris avēnā, you play a pastoral air or rural tune on a slender oaten reed or pipe, Virg. E. 1, 2. so 3, 27. Martial. 8, 3 f. Tibul. 3, 4, 71. structis cantat avenis, plays on oaten straws joined together, Ov. Met. 1, 677. for the shepherd's pipe, in its improved state, was composed of several reeds of different lengths: sic rustica quondam fistula disparibus paulatim surgit avenis, ib. 8, 192.

AVĒNACEUS, adj. oaten, made of oats.—

AVĒNARIUS, adj. of or belonging to oats.

AVEO, ēre, to desire eagerly: itaque quum sumus negotiis curisque vacui, tum avemus aliquid audire et discere, Cic. Off. 1, 4. valde aveo, scire quid agas, Cic. Att. 2, 15. & 2, 1. parto, quod avebas, having gotten what you desired, Hor. Sat. 1, 1, 93. so 1, 14, 87. & 2, 4, 1. It is sometimes written HAVĒO, Cic. Att. 1, 15 s. & 20.

AVĪDUS, a. desirous, eager, greedy, covetous: avidior ad rem aliquantum, too fond of money, Ter. Eun. 1, 2, 51. cibi avidus, ib. 5, 4, 16. avidissimus gloriae, Cic. Marcel. 8. servorum manus subitis (dat.) avidae, intent on sudden wealth, Tac. Hist. 1, 7. avida Charybdis, greedy of devouring ships, Ovid. Met. 14, 75. spiritus, covetous, Hor. Od. 2, 2, 9. tigris, greedy of blood, Lucan. 6, 487. Vulcanus, eager for battle, Horat. Od. 3, 4, 58. Lucretius uses avidus for magnus, 5, 202. & 471.—

AVĪDE, adv. eagerly: pransus non avidè, not greedily, Hor. Sat. 1, 6, 127. edere avidè, Ov. Art. Am. 3, 659.—

AVĪDITAS, ātis, f. an eager desire: aviditas legendi, Cic. Fin. 3, 2. ad aliquid faciendum, Plin. 17, 18. ad cibos, Id. 20, 16. pecuniae, Cic. Parad. 1. sermonis, Id. Sen. 14.

AVĒRNUM, i, m. pl. -a. n. a lake of Campania of a disagreeable steam, Geog. p. 151. put for the entrance to the infernal regions, Virg. Æ. 6, 237. or for the abode of the dead; hence called Tartareus Avernus, Stat. Theb. 3, 108. vacuus, because possessed by incorporeal shades, Claudian. de Rapt. Proserp. 1, 20. umbrosus, ib. 1, 116.— used as an adjective; thus, Avernas exire valles, to leave the infernal regions,* Ovid. Met. 6, 738. loca Averna, Virg. G. 2, 164. degeneres tenebris animas damnavit Avernis, to infernal darkness, Sil. 15, 76.—put also for Pluto, Val. Flac. 2, 693. & 5, 348.—hence Avernales aquae, the waters of Avernus, Hor. Epod. 5, 26. the same with what Virgil calls latices fontis Averni, Virg. Æ. 4, 512. Avernales nymphae, the infernal nymphs, Ovid. Met. 5, 540.

AVĒRRUNCĀRE, (or a & verrunco,) to avert, to expiate: placuit averruncandae deum irae, victimas caedi, Liv. 8, 6. averruncare prodigia, ib. 10, 23. dii averruncant, Cic. Att. 9, 2. so Cato, R. R. 141.

AVĒRTĒRE, (a-vertō, ti, sum,) to turn away, to avert.—

AVĒRSUS, a, um, averse.—

AVĒRSIO, onis, f. a turning away.—

AVĒRSOR, oris, m. a purloiner or embezzler of the public money.—

AVĒRSOR, ātus, ari, to turn from, to dislike, to abhor.—

AVĒRSATIO, ōnis, f. aversion, abhorrence.—

Div. 1, 33.—in illo augurato templo et loco, i. e. in the rostra, a place consecrated by the augurs, Cic. Val. 10. aves quasdam—rum augurandarum causâ esse natas putamus, Cic. N. D. 2, 64.—accitus Numa, sicut Romulus AUGURATÒ, (by augury, after consulting the gods by augury,) urbe condendâ regnum adeptus est, de se quoque deos consuli jussit, Liv. 1, 18. cf. Id. 5, 54.—AUGURATU praeditus, invested with the dignity or office of augur. Tac. Ann. 1, 62. gratularis mihi, quòd acceperim auguratum, i. e. quòd augur factus sim, Plin. Ep. 4, 8. ne diutiùs loquar de auguratû tuo, Cic. Val. 9. lituus insigne auguratûs, Cic. Div. 1, 17. scientia auguratûs, the knowledge of augury, ib.—quae ista AUGURATIO est ex passeribus, annorum potius, quam aut mensium, aut dierum? (what kind of divining or conjecturing is that?) Cic. de Div. 2, 30.

AUGUSTUS, a, um, august, sacred, venerable. sanctus augustusque fons, Cic. T. 5, 13. AUGUSTÈ, adv. venerably, with reverence.—augustè sanctèque deos venerari, reverently, Cic. N. D. 3, 21. so 2, 24. augustiùs de religione dicere, Id. Brut. 21.—

AUGUSTUS, i, n. a name given to Caesar Octavianus, and from him to the month of August.—The meaning and derivation of AUGUSTUS began to be disputed when that title was conferred on the grand nephew and adopted son of Julius Caesar; some deriving it from AUGEO, and others from AUGUR. Ovid fluctuates between the two; thus, sancta vocant augusta patres vocantur templa, sacerdotum dicata manu. hujus et Auguriam dependet origine verbi, et quodcunque suâ Jupiter auget ope, Fast. 1, 607. cf. so Suet. Aug. 7. loca religiosa, et in quibus auguratò quid consecratur, AUGUSTA dicuntur, ab auctu, vel ab avium gestu gustaque: sicut etiam Ennius docet scribens, augusto augurio postquam indyta condita Roma est.—Virgil uses it as a proper name; Augustus Caesar divi genus, i. e. the adopted son of Julius Caesar, who was ranked among the gods, Æn. 6, 793. so 8, 678. but Claudian uses it as a common name; belliger augustus, the warlike emperor Theodosius, Claudian. Consul. Probi et Olyb. 74.—* The name of AUGUSTA was given to the wives, sometimes also to the mothers, and even to the daughters or other near female relations of the emperors, Tac. Ann. 1, 8. & 12, 26. & 15, 23. Hist. 2, 89. Plin. Pan. 84.—* The name of AUGUSTA was given to several towns in different countries of the empire: see Geog. Index. Ovid applies AUGUSTUS to any thing belonging to the emperor; thus, aures Augustae, the ears of Augustus, Pont. 1, 2, 117. forum Augustum, the forum built by Augustus, Fast. 5, 552. loca, his palace, Id. Trist. 1, 1, 71. so postes Augusti, Ov. M. 1, 56. augustae fores, Trist. 3, 1, 40. caput Augustum, the head of Augustus, Met. 15, 869. numen Augustum adorare, the majesty or divinity of Augustus, Trist. 3, 8, 13. pace Augusta frui, peace procured by Augustus, Pont. 2, 5, 18. alius, sc. suasit, ut omne tempus a primo die natali ad exitum ejus, seculum Augustum appellaretur, Suet. Aug. 100.—* Sextilem mensem e suo cognomine nuncupavit, sc. Augustus, Suet. Aug. 31.—

AUGUSTALE, is, u. the general's tent, Quinctil. 8, 2, 3. But the best editors read, AUGURALE.

AVIARIUM, i, n. an inclosed place where birds are bred or kept, an aviary.—

AVIARIUS, a, of a bird, pertaining to birds, Varr. R. R. 3, 5.—

AVIARIUS, i, m. one who has the charge of an aviary.—sequitur natura AVIUM, the nature of birds comes next to be treated of, Plin. 10, 1. alba avis, i. e. a rare thing, Cic. Fam. 7, 28. so Juvenal. 7, 202.—White birds were reckoned of a lucky omen; hence non albae aves, unlucky birds, Ovid. Amor. 3, 12, 2. aves quasdam, et alites et oscines (both those which give omens by flying, and those that give omens by singing,) ut nostri augures appellant, rerum agendarum causâ esse natas putamus, Cic. N. D. 2, 64. malâ ducis avi domum, sc. Helenam, with a bad omen, Hor. Od. 1, 15, 5. add. Epod. 10, 1. inculca aviaria, sequestered groves, frequented by birds, Virg. G. 2, 490. & ibi Serv.

AULA, æ, f. a hall, a large place at the entrance of great houses, open at top. See ATRĪUM: also a palace, a court: lectus genialis in aula est, in the hall or atrium, Hor. Ep. 1, 1, 87. (A. 467. — aula: (for aulae) in medio libabant pocula Bacchi, in the middle of the hall or atrium, Virg. Aë. 2, 55.—AULA is also put for the stable of cattle, Propert. 3, 11, 39. from the Greek αὐλῆ; (Graeci AULAS vocant animalium receptacula, unde in sacris aedibus et tribunaliis, septa quae turbas prohibent, aulis vocamus.) Serv. ad Virg. Aë. 9, 60.—But AULA commonly denotes the palace or court of kings; thus erat aulā, qui voluit esse pius: virtus et summa potestas non cōstant, Lucan. 8, 491.—Virgil uses AULA metaphorically for a bee-hive, as being the palace of the king of the bees, G. 4, 20. y 202.—(II) The ancients wrote AULA for OLLA, a pot, Plaut. Aul. 4, 2, 3, & 10, Care. 2, 3, 89. Rud. 1, 2, 47. Cato, R. R. 85, & 32. & 81. Quinct. 7, 9, 4. whence—

AULAEUM, ī, n. ostener in the plural AULAEA, orum, painted curtains, like what we call tapest y hangings; said to have been first invented in the palace (AULA) of Attālus, king of Pergamus.—aulaea dicta sunt ab AULA Atali regis, in qua primum inventa vela illa ingentia, Serv. ad Virg. G. 3, 25. These Aulaea were first used in houses for various purposes; thus, aulacis jam se regina superbis aureā composuit spondā, reclined herself on a golden couch, covered with superb or rich tapestry, Virg. Aë. 1, 697. lectis circumdāre aulaea, purpurā auroque fulgentia, Curt. 9, 15, interea suspensa graves aulaea ruinas in patinam fecēre, the hangings suspended below the ceiling of the apartment, in which they supped, to catch the dust, Hor. Sat. 2, 8, 54. sine aulacis et ostro, without these hangings, and without purple coverings for the couches, or perhaps the latter only are meant, (i. e. sine aulacis purpureis,) Hor. Od. 3, 29, 15. porticus aulacis nobilis Attalicis, with hangings to keep off the dust and heat of the sun, Propert. 2, 32, 12.—(II) particularly in the theatre; sic ubi tolluntur festis aulaea theatris, when the hangings are drawn up in the joyful theatres, or on holidays, or as we say, the curtain is dropt, Ovid. Met. 3, 11. for the ancients, contrary to the modern custom, when they wanted to conceal what was doing in the back part of the stage, raised (tollebant) the curtain from the floor to the top, and drew it down (premebant) when the back part of the stage was exposed: quatuor aut plures aulaea piemuntur in horis, the curtain is kept down or withdrawn, i. e. the acting of the play is suspended, for four hours or more, while the representation of a battle and a triumph is exhibited, Hor. Ep. 2, 1, 189. See Cic. Fam. 7, 1. aulaeum tollitur, the curtain is drawn up, as we say, falls or is dropt; i. e. the play or farce is over, Cic. Coel. 27. Si plausoris eges aulaea monentis, i. e. donec aulaea tollantur vel leventur, if you wish an applause or favourable audience, who will wait the conclusion of the play, Hor. Art. p. 154. quoties aulaea recondita cessant, are laid up or lie concealed, i. e. no plays are acted, Juvenal. 6, 67.

AULESTRIS, ūdis, f. a female player on the flute, a music girl, Quinct. 7, 9, 4.

AULĒTES, æ, m. a player on the flute, Cic. Mur. 13. but the best editors have AULOEDUS, whence—AUSCULTATIO, onis, f. a listening.

AUSCULTATOR, ōris, m. a listener or hearer.—AUSCULTAMUS non nisi volentes, Gell. 1, 15. ausculto, atque adverto animum sedulo, Plaut. Stich. 1, 4, 40. ausculto paucis, listen to a few words, Ter. Adel. 5, 3. te ausculto libens, Plaut. Ps. 1, 5, 38. so Poen. 4, 2, 19. Trin. 3, 2, 36. crimina, Id. Aul. 3, 5, 22. & Ps. 1, 5, 12. ausculto quod superest fallaciae, sc. id, Ter. Heaut. 4, 5, 23. populum auscultare, Catul. 66, 39.—* ab audiendo etiam auscultare declinamus, quod hi auscultare dicuntur, qui auditis parent. Varro, de Lat. Ling. 5, 8. auscultes mihi, hearken to me, take my advice, Plaut. Curc. 2, 1, 8. nec quid agam certum est, Pamphilumne adjutem, an auscultem seni, obey or comply with, Ter. And. 1, 3, 4. Hence audio and ausculto are opposed; thus, magis audiendum, quam auscultandum censeo, Cic. Div. 1, 57.—(III) Impersonal. auscultabitur, sc. a me, I will attend to you or hear you, Plaut. Merc. 3, 3, 127.

AUSIM, (contracted for ausus sim,) ausis, ausit,—ausint; a defect. verb; the same with audeam, I dare, I should venture.—de grege non ausim quidquam deponere tecum, I dare not, Virg. E. 3. 32. ausim vel tenui vitem committere sulco, I should venture to plant, Id. G. 2, 289. nec si sciam, dicere ausim, dare I say it, Liv. Praef. 1. hoc ausim confirmare, Lucr. 2, 178.

AUSPEX, ūcis, m. (ab avis & specio,) properly an observer of birds, one who pretended to discover the will of the gods, &c.; to foretell future events, from the flight, the sounds, and feeding of birds, or in any other manner; an augur, a soothsayer, one who authorises the doing of a thing, a leader.—ego quid timebo providus AUSPEX? a provident or skilful augur, Hor. Od. 3, 27, 8. auspices legis Curiatae, those who patronized the Lex Curiata, whereby Clodius was adopted by a plebeian, i. e. Caesar and Pompey, the favourers or supporters of that law, Cic. Att. 2, 7.—The magistrate who took the auspices before a law was passed, and declared that the omens were favourable, was properly called AUSPEX LEGIS, Div. 38, 13. victoriarum toto orbe partarum auspices, sc. galli gallinacei, the cocks by their feeding (See TRIPUDIA SOLISTIMA) gave omens which presaged the victories gained by the Roman people, and thus were the foretellers of them, Plin. 10. 21 s. 24. auspices nuptiarum, the augurs who took the auspices, before the celebration of a marriage, and declared whether the omens were favourable or not, Cic. Div. 1, 16. but this custom was dropt, Cic. ib. Val. Max. 2, 1.—diis auspibus, under the conduct or direction of the gods, Virg. A. 4, 45. Tencro duce, et auspice, Hor. Od. 1, 7, 27. auspice musâ, Id. Ep. 1, 3, 13. Phoebos auspice, Stat. Silv. 2, 2, 39. sacra diis ferebam auspibus coeptorum operum, the authors or favourers, Virg. A. 3, 20.

AUSPICIUM, ii, n. an auspice; a method of soothsaying, among the Romans, or of foretelling future events from the flight, chirping, or feeding of birds, or from any other appearance; for by such signs the gods were supposed to intimate their will or intentions with respect to futurity; also authority, conduct, a beginning.—auspicium ab ave specienda, Festus.—te mihi in auspicio esse volo, I wish you to assist me in taking the auspices; the words of the magistrate to an augur, when he desired his assistance in taking the auspices, (in auspiciam adhibebat,) Cic. Div. 2, 34. (A. 88.)—Before consuls were created from among the plebeians, nor e but patricians had the right of taking the auspices, Liv. 6, 41. cf. Cic. Leg. 3, 12. nos nisi dum a populo auspicia accepta habemus, (have got the right of taking the auspices,) as the greater magistrates, or those who commanded armies,) quàm multum is utimur? i. e. raro auspiciis nunc utimur, Cic. Div. 2, 36. optimum, Cic. Sen. 4. secundum, prosperous, Hor. Od. 4, 14, 16. salvis auspiciis, not against the auspices, Cic. Prov. Cons. 19. vitiosum, Id. Div. 1, 16. utile, Ovid. Fast. 1, 219. addicentibus auspiciis, the omens being favourable, Tacit. An. 2, 14.—auspicia dissolvere, to destroy, to vilify the authority of the auspices, Cic. Vat. 8 f. eumentiri, to falsify, to tell that an omen had happened, which had not, Cic. Div. 1, 16.—(II) As the superior magistrates alone had the power of taking the auspices; hence, AUSPICIUM is put for supreme command or power, and is sometimes distinguished from DUCTUS, so that AUSPICIUM is referred to the supreme commander, even when absent, and DUCTUS, to him who performs any thing in person, or who acts as lieutenant to the chief commander; thus, ductu Germanici, auspiciis Tiberii, Tac. Ann. 2, 41. alia ductu meo, (in person,) alia imperio auspicioque (by my lieutenants) perdomui, Curt. 6, 3, 2.—* When a chief commander performed any thing in person, he was sometimes said to do it, both by his conduct and his auspices; thus, supplicatio fuit, ob res prosperè gestas in Hispaniâ, ductu auspicioque Ap. Claudii proconsulis, Liv. 41, 28.—When the consuls commanded each one day alternately, he who commanded was said Habere auspiciam vel -ia; thus, Quoniam in provincia Livii res gesta esset, et eo sorte die, quo pugnatum esset, auspiciam ejus fuisset, &c. Liv. 28, 9. hence communem hunc ergo populum paribusque regamus auspiciis, with equal authority, Virg. A. 4, 102. me si fata meis paterentur ducere vitam auspiciis, according to my own pleasure, by my own direction, ib. 340. auspiciam cui das grande, deosque tuos, power, military command, Ovid. Trist. 2, 174. But dare auspiciam jusque in certamina, i. e. potestatem pugnandi, leave to fight, Sil. 13, 154. cf. 7, 231.—auspicia belli a parricidio incipientes, beginning the war with, Justin. 26, 2. add. 27. castrorum auspiciam, beginning to serve in the army, Stat. Silv. 5, 2, 10.

AUSPICĀLIS, e, pertaining to auspices, ominous.

AUSPICĀRI, (-or, ātus,) vel AUSPICĀRI, to take the auspices or omens, to begin.—C. Flaminius, cum tripudio auspicaretur, (was taking the auspices by feeding chickens,) pullarius diem praelii committendi differabat, i. e. differendum dicebat, Cic. Div. 1, 35. illi autem, qui in auspiciam adhibetur, quam ita imperavit is, qui auspicatur, DICITO, &c. when the consul ordered the augur, &c. ib. 2, 34. (II) animal caeteris imperaturum, i. e. homo, a supplicans vitam auspicatur, begins his life with supplications, Plin. 7. proem. so auspiciam militiam, Suet. Aug. 38. culturarum officium, Col. 11, 2, 3. add. 3, 1, 1. anno novo legere, scribere, dicere aliquid—auspicabar, Senec. Ep. 83. cf. Ovid. Fast. 1, 164. quem militiae gradum (sc. tribunatum) sub patre tuo auspicatus, having first obtained,—perfruo, Vell. 2, 101.—

AUSPICĀTUS, a, lucky, fortunate.—auspicat-

AVULSUS, avulsor, &c. See AVELLĒRT.

AVUNCŪLUS, i, m. the mother's brother, an uncle by the mother's side.—Traxit appellacionem inde, quod aequè tertius a me ut avus est, sed non ejusdem juris; ideoque vocabuli diminutio est: Sive AVUNCULUS appellatur, quod avi locum obtineat, et proximitate tueatur sororis filium, Festus. Magnus avunculus, the grandmother's brother, Cic. Brut. 62. avunculus major, the great grandmother's brother, Digest. But this distinction is not always observed. Thus, Julius Caesar is called simply Augusti Avunculus, Suet. Aug. 8 & 10 & 68. who was properly major avunculus, as being the brother of the grandmother of Augustus: and the same author calls the same Caesar, major avunculus Augusti, Aug. 7. so Vell. Paterc. 2, 59. In like manner Augustus is called avunculus major Claudii, Surt. Cl. 3. when he ought to have been called magnus avunculus, as Octavia, the grandmother of Claudius by the mother's side, was the sister of Augustus. Seneca calls the husband of his mother's sister (materterae) his avunculus, Consol. ad Helv. 17. Persius, to express any remote ancestor, says, et mihi ritu Manius hic generis prope major avunculus exit, 6, 60.

AVUS, i, m. a grandfather, the father's or mother's father. avus maternus atque paternus, a grandfather by the mother's and father's side, Hor. Sat. 1, 6, 3. avi numerantur avorum, Virg. G. 4, 209. despectis ortus avis, sprung from contemptible ancestors, Ovid. Ep. 20, 224. AVIA, ae, f. a grandmother. avia nihil superest, i. e. de bonis aviae, Pers. 6, 55. veteres aviae, i. e. delirae, Id. 5, 92.

AVITUS, a. of an ancestor. avita bona, Cic. Coel. 14. celeritatem avitam nulus refert, Col. 6, 37. cellis avitis depromere Caecubum, to take Caecuban wine from the cellars in which one's grandfather had laid it up, Hor. Od. 1, 37, 6. avitus fundus, a farm received by inheritance from his grandfather or ancestors, an hereditary farm, Hor. Od. 1, 12, 43. avitum mihi hospitium est cum Lyso, I have with Lyso a league of hospitality first formed with his grandfather, Cic. Fam. 13, 34. at Numa nec Janum, nec avitas praeterit umbras, of his ancestors, Ovid. Fast. 1, 43.

BENEFICUS, a, um, (bene & facio,) beneficent, prone to do good; friendly, kind.—

BENEFICENTIA, sc. f. beneficence, kindness. benefici voluntate benevolentia movetur, et animus forte non suppetat, Cic. Off. 2, 9. ubi enim beneficentia, si nemo alterius causâ benigne facit, Cic. Leg. 1, 18. ut enim benefici liberalesque sumus, non ut exigamus gratiam, Id. Amic. 9. vid. Gell. 17, 5. beneficentior adversus bene meritos, Sen. Ben. 1, 4. beneficentissimus, C. c. N. D. 2, 25. Priscian quotes beneficentissimus, from Cato, l. 3.—BENEFICÈ, adv. Gell. 17, 5.—BENEFICENTIAE quam eandem vel benignitatem, vel liberalitatem appellari licet, Cic. Off. 1, 7. & 2, 15. N. D. 1, 43.

BENEFICIUM, i. n. a benefit, a favour, a privilege, advancement in the army: beneficium est, quod alienus det; alienus est, qui sine reprehensione potuit cessare: officium est filii, uxoris, et earum personarum, quas necessitudo suscitât, et ferre opem jubet; ministerium est servi, &c. Sed adeo dominis servi beneficia possunt dare, ut ipsos saepe beneficii sui fecerint, that they have often made them indebted to their favour for themselves, i. e. that they owed to them their life and every thing, (some read beneficia sua.) Senec. Benef. 3, 18. commeatus a senatu peti solitos beneficii sui fecit, Claudius made the leave of absence which used to be asked from the senate to depend on his favour or gift, i. e. he assumed to himself the power of granting to senators the licence of going out of Italy, which power had before belonged to the senate, Suet. Claud. 23. However, that he might appear to exercise this right by law, he procured a decree of the senate to be made for that purpose, Dio. 60, 25. See LEGATIO LIBERA.—In like manner those were called BENEFICIA, whom a praecusul or governor of a province, upon his return to Rome, after the expiration of his command, recommended to the public, for their zeal and fidelity in their respective functions, and gave in a list of their names at the same time with his accounts to the treasury. These were said In beneficiis ad aerarium deferri, Cic. Arch. 5. Thus, Quod scribis de beneficiis; scito a me et tribunos militares et praefectos, et contubernales duntaxat meos delatos esse. In quo quidem ratio me fefellit: liberum enim mihi tempus ad eos deferendos existimabam dari, I thought I might give in their names at any time. Postea certior sum factus, triginta diebus deferri necesse esse, quibus rationes retulissem, that it is necessary to present this list, within thirty days after exhibiting the accounts. Sane moleste tuli, non illa beneficia tuae potius ambitioni reservata esse, potius quam meae, qui ambitione non uterer, I was vexed that the nomination of those recommended to public favour for their services was not reserved to you, who by that compliment might have conferred an obligation on those persons, and thus secured their interest to promote your future views of ambition or preferment, as I have no ambitious views to serve by nominating them myself. De centurionibus tamen et de tribunorum militarium contubernaliibus res est in integro, with respect to the centurions and companions of the military tribunes, the matter is still open, there is nothing done about it; you may still present a list of their names yourself. Genus enim horum beneficiorum definitum lege non erat, for the law has not fixed any time for presenting that list, Cic. Fam. 5, 20. In praetura, in consulatu praefectum fabrum detulit, sc. in beneficiis, Caesar gave in the name of Balbus, his chief engineer, in the list of those whom he recommended for their services, Cic. Balb. 28. It does not appear, that those whose names were thus given in to the treasury, (in beneficiis ad aerarium delati sunt,) received any pecuniary emolument from the public; as the attendants of the overseers of aqueducts, Frontin de Aqued. Art. 100, p. 179. Poleni. The inserting of any person's name in this list seems to have been merely honorary, and to serve as a recommendation to future preferment.—* Cavianum meo beneficio in Novocomenses retulit, sc. Caesar, Caesar, by my recommendation, admitted him into the corporation of Novocomum, or ranked him amongst its citizens, Cic. Fam. 13, 35. Beneficia, virtutis causâ, tribuere, Cic. Balb. 16 f. Cum propter quosdam sordidos homines, qui beneficia Caesaris vendebant, (sold the privileges of being Roman citizens) granted by Caesar, tabulam in qua nomina civitate donatorum incisa essent, revelli jussisset, sc. Caesar, Caesar ordered the brazen table on which their names were engraved to be pulled, and consequently those grants to be revoked.—Dolabellae dixit, nihil esse, quod de Mega vereretur, beneficium suum in eo manere, that his benefaction or favour to him should remain in its full force, that Mega should still continue to be a Roman citizen, ib. 36. Praeclara senatus consulta fecisti, ne qua post Idus Martias immunitatis tabula, neve cujusquam beneficii figeretur, that no table, containing the names of those on whom Caesar had bestowed any immunity or privilege, should be fixed up in public, Cic. Phil. 2, 36. Itaque quum ita civitas Italiae data est, (the right of being Romum citizens was given to the Italians,) ut in octo tribus distribuerentur novi cives; ne potentia eorum et multitudo veterum civium dignitatem frangeret, plusque possent recepti in beneficium, (the Italians admitted into the freedom of the city should be more powerful,) quam auctores beneficii, (than the Romans, who had conferred that favour or privilege,) Cinna in omnibus tribubus eos se distributurum pollicitus est, Patere. 2, 20. Rogo itaque, ut beneficio tuo legitime frui possit, (legally to enjoy the complete privileges of a Roman, i. e. Jus QUIRITUM,) tribuas ei et Alexandrinam civitatem et Romanam, Plin. Ep. 10, 22.—* Cooptatio collegiorum ad populi beneficium transferebatur, the right of choosing proper persons to supply vacancies in the different colleges of priests, which used to belong to the members of the colleges themselves, was transferred to the people, Cic. Amic. 25.—BENEFICIUM in the civil law usually denotes a privilege or peculiar right annexed to persons of a particular age, or condition, Digest. passim.—beneficio alicujus, by means of any one, ib. so tuo beneficio, by your means, Cic. Fam. 11, 22. beneficio fortunæ, ib. 10, 4. actatis, Quintil. 3, 1, 9. ingenii, Id. 2, 11, 2. et 5, 10, 121. beneficio illo legis—nihil utitur, he does not avail himself of the privilege or indulgence granted him by the law, Cic. Rull. 2, 29. Buleutæ additi beneficio tuo, the senators added by your appointment, Plin. Ep. 10, 48. cupio aliquos parere amicos beneficio meo, by my good services, Ter. 1, 2, 69.—beneficium ab aliquo accipere, Ter. Adel. 2, 3, 1. habere, Cic. Sext. 22. beneficio ab aliquo affici, Id. Phor. 2, 1, 22. tribuni plebis certamen sine effectu in beneficio apud primores patrum reliquere, gave up the fruitless contest, which they wished to be considered as an obligation conferred on the chief senators, Liv. 4, 7. Est enim ita comparatum (sc. naturâ), ut antiquiora beneficia subvertas, nisi illa posterioribus cumules, it is so ordered by nature, such is the disposition of mankind, that you cancel former favours, unless you grant new ones, Plin. Ep. 3, 4. meum erga te parentemque tuum beneficium tueri debeo, to support, to make it of use by a new favour, Cic. Coel. 3.

BENEFICIARIUS, a, um, that may be given as a favour: quid haberes, quod in philosophia suspiceres, si beneficiaria res esset, if it could be given or received as a favour, Senec. Ep. 90.

BENEFICIARII, orum, soldiers exempted from certain services in the camp: beneficiarii—qui vocabant muneris, (al. munere vel muneribus,) beneficio, (sc. ducis,) who were exempted from certain military services, particularly in the camp; as the digging of the rampart, the carrying of fodder, wood, &c. Festus. Veget. 2, 19. Some purchased this exemption (vacatio munerum,) with money for a time, Tac. Ann. 1, 17 & 35. Hist. 1, 46. Those who obtained it in perpetuity by the favour of their general or tribune were called BENEFICIARII, beneficiary or privileged soldiers; and were esteemed very faithful, Caes. B. C. 1, 75. & 3, 88. They were superior to common soldiers, Veget. 2, 7. and under the Emperors were employed for various purposes, particularly to attend on governors of provinces, and to aid magistrates in the discharge of certain functions, Plin. Ep. 10, 32. & 36.

BENĒVŌLUS vel BENIVOLUS, a, um & BENIVOLENS, tis, (bene & volo,) benevolent, amicable, kind. Comp. benevolentior, benevolentissimus.

BUCINĀTOR a vocis similitudine (sono BU) et cantu dictus, Varr. L. L. 5, 7. Those who write BUCINA with a double C, derive it from BUCA, because it requires inflated cheeks to blow it. The BUCINA was at first made of the horn of an ox or goat, but afterwards of brass: tuba, quae directae est, appellatur, buccina, quae in semet ipsum acreo circulo flectitur, Veg. 3, 5. It was used to give a signal to shepherds or peasants, and to soldiers in war. pastorale canit (sc. Alecto) signum, cornuque recurvo Tartaream intendit vocem, i. e. buccinâ, Virg. Aë. 7, 513 & 519. cava buccina sumitur illi (i. e. a Tritone) Tortilia, quae turbino crescit ab imo, Ov. Met. 1, 335. signum quod erat notum vicinitate, buccinâ datur, Cic. Verr. 4, 44. bello dat signum rauco cruentum buccina, Virg. Aë. 11, 474. The BUCINA was particularly used in giving the signal when the watches were changed. et jam quarta canit venturum buccina lucem, Propert. 4, 4, 63. te gallorum, illum buccinarum cantus exsuscitât, the sound of the cocks rouses you (a lawyer in the city;) the sound of the buccinae rouses him (an officer in the camp,) Cic. Muræ. 9. nam si Virgilio puer, et tolerabile desit hospitium, caderent omnes a crinibus hydra: surda nihil gemeret grave buccina, had Virgil wanted a servant, and a tolerable lodging, all the snakes would have fallen from the hair of the fury Alecto, (whom he describes, Aë. 7, 447.) her dumb trumpet would have uttered no dreadful sound, (as, Aë. 7, 513.) i. e. if Virgil had not enjoyed all the conveniences of life, by the bounty of Maecenas, he would not have written with so great spirit, Juv. 7, 69. sed qui sermones? quae foedae buccinae famae? but what do men say of you? how loud the trumpet of your base fame? i. e. what a foul character have you abroad? (said of a miser. N.B. Fame is commonly painted with a trumpet.) Juv. 14, 152.

BUCĪNUM, i, n. a trumpet, or the sound of a trumpet; also a kind of shell-fish. buccinum est clangor buccinae, Isidor. 18, 4. Pliny speaking of bees, says, interdiu statio ad portas more castrorum, noctu quies in matutinum, donec una (sc. apis) excitet gemino aut simplici bombo, ut buccino aliquo, (by a trumpet,) Plin. 11, 10 pr. & fin. buccini purpura, purple of the best kind, Quintil. 12, 10, 76. But this passage is read and explained differently.—

BUCĪNO, ĀRE, v. a. to sound a trumpet: saepe declamante illo ter buccinavit. (impers.) the trumpet sounded thrice, i. e. three hours elapsed; for it appears a buccina was sounded at the end of every hour, Sen. Controv. 3 praef. quum buccinatum est, aperiant, ut exire possint, when the signal is given with the trumpet, they open the folds that the cattle may go out, Varr. R. R. 2, 4, 20.

BUCINĀTOR, ŌRIS, m. a trumpeter: buccinatore in castris relicto, a trumpeter who sounded at the changing of the watches, Caes. B. C. 2, 35.—metaph. Polliceris te buccinatore fore estimationis meae, Cic. Fam. 16, 21.

BULLA, ae, f. a bubble in water; a stud or boss:—intumuit; sic, ut pluvio perlucida caelo surgere bulla solet, as a transparent bubble uses to rise in rainy weather, Ov. Met. 10, 734. est homo bulla, Varr. R. R. pr. nos non pluris sumus, quam bullae, Petron. 42. Tungri civitas Galliae fontem habet insignem, plurimis bullis stellantem, sparkling with numerous bubbles, Plin. 31, 2 s. 8.—hence from similitude, aurea bullis cingula, belts with golden bosses or studs, Virg. Æ. 9, 359. so et notis fulserunt cingula bullis, ib. 12, 942. quis procul ille, humerum nodis (i. e. bullis) cui balteus asper subligat, Val. Flacc. 5, 579. jussine in splendorem dari bullas has foribus nostris? did I not order these studs on our door to be scoured or made bright? (the ancients used to ornament their doors with nails with large heads, made either of brass or some metal gilt and polished:) Plaut. Asin. 2, 4, 20. bullas aureas omnes ex valvis non dubitavit auferre, Cic. Verr. 4, 56. bulla super frontem (sc. servii) parvis argentea loris vincta movebatur, a silver ball or boss tied with small straps, moved on his forehead, Ovid. Met. 10, 114. A similar kind of boss or stud seems to be denoted, Vitruv. 9, 9. & Petron. c. 30.—quis enim tam nudus, ut illum bis ferat, Hetruscum puero si contigit aurum, (if he has worn a golden boss when a boy,

i. e. is a free-born citizen,) vel nodus tantum, et signum de paupere loro? (or only a poor leathern boss, i. e. is the son of a freed man,) Juvenal. 5, 164. The BULLA is called Hetruscum aurum, because the custom of wearing it was brought from Etruria, ib. It was anciently peculiar to the sons of nobility, but afterwards permitted to all free-born citizens, Macrob. ib. Boys laid aside the bulla with the toga praetexta, and consecrated it to the LARES, Pers. 5, 30. Propert. 4, 1, 131. dic senior bulli dignissime, you simple old man, worthy again to wear the bulla, Juvenal. 13, 33.—A gold boss is mentioned among the toys of girls; et bulla aurea est, pater quam dedit mihi natali die, Plaut. Deos propius, to have access to the great, i. e. to Augustus, Hor. Sat. 2, 6, 52. animum curā, to touch with solicitude, Val. Flacc. 7, 173.—(II) CONTINGIT, (impers.) it happens: non cuivis homini contingit adire Corinthum, Hor. Ep. 1, 17, 36. nulli contigit impune nasci, Senec. ad Marc. 15. non aegre contingit, it is done without great difficulty or expence, Col. 8, 7, 1. facere contingit sc. tibi, you may make, ib. c. 8, 1.—* Often also with a nominative in the third person singular and plural:—honor contigit tibi ex merito, Ovid. Pont. 4, 7, 16. gaudia contingant mihi, ib. 2, 1, 7. contigerant illi connubia matris tuae, a marriage with your mother had fallen to his lot, Ov. Met. 12, 194.—The following distinction is generally observed: CONTINGUNT bona, accidunt mala, eveniunt utraque; hence, scies plura mala contingere nobis, quam accidere, happen to us for our good, than for our hurt, Sen. Ep. 110. But this distinction does not always take place; as, Cic. Or. 2, 4. Off. 1, 22.—passiv. mea causa nihil eo facto contingitur, is nowise affected, Liv. 40, 14.—* CONTINGO is sometimes used as if it were compounded of TINGO: contingitur sale caseus, is seasoned, tinged or mixed with, Col. 7, 8, 4. so aut parco sale contingunt, sc. lac pressum, vel caseum, Virg. G. 3, 403. contingunt corpus amurcā, anoint with the lees of oil, ib. 448. add. Col. 9, 8, 8. Tranq. 7.—

CONTĀGIUM, i, n. & Contāgio, ōnis, & -āges, is, f. contagion, the catching of a disease or pollution by the touch: post ubi, contagio quasi, pestilentia invasit, as if by contagion, Sallust. Cat. 10. nec mala vicini pecoris contagia laedent, Virg. E. 1, 51.—CONTAGIUM is most frequent in poetry, and CONTAGIO in prose: contagio ipsa vulgabat morbos, contagion, Liv. 3, 6. contagione pulmonum calescit spiritus, by touching the lungs, Cic. Nat. 2, 55. contagio corporis, the influence, Cic. Div. 1, 30. & 2, 44. contagio cum corporibus, connexion, contagion, Cic. Tusc. 1, 30. contagionibus malorum, by the contagion or communication of mischief, Cic. Off. 2, 23. quaedam contagio sceleris, a participation of guilt, Id. Sull. 2. so contagio praedae, Id. Dom. 41. ad quos conscientiae contagio pertinebit, who shall be conscious of the fault, and therefore some how infected with it, Cic. Verr. 5, 71. contagionem aspectūs fugere, to avoid being polluted by the sight of so wicked a person, Cic. Cluent. 68. contagio naturae vel rerum, of causes and effects whereby, according to the opinion of the Stoicks, one thing contained the cause of another, Cic. Fat. 3 & 4. dedit hanc contagio labem, et dabit in plures, contagion has produced this stain or vice, and will spread it to others, i. e. by associating with effeminate persons you have become effeminate, and will make others so by your example, Juv. 2, 78.—CONTĀGE suā, for contagione, Lucr. 4, 536. et mala multa animus contagi (al. -e) fungitur ejus, the soul suffers many evils by its connexion with the body, ib. 3, 734. e contagibus ignis calescit ventus, is heated by its contact with the seeds of fire in the clouds, ib. 6, 279. contagibus ibant, they died by infection, ib. 1241.—

CONTIGUUS, a, um, contiguous, adjoining: contiguae domus, Ov. Met. 4, 57. mihi quidam spectanti senior, contiguusque loco, an old man who stood or sat near me at the spectacles, Ov. Fast. 4, 378.

CON-TORQUERE (-queo, si, tum,) *stellas, to whirl, to turn round, Cic. N. D. 2, 21. so cursum, Cic. Orat. 61. cā celeritate contorquetur (sc. mundus, is turned round,) cui par nulla ne cogitari quidem possit, Cic. N. D. 1, 10. freta inno fundo, to turn up, Sil. 3, 50. hastam, to throw, to dart, Virg. Æ. 2, 52. so spicula, ib. 7, 165. program ad laevas undas, to turn, ib. 8, 462. al quem tum ad severitatem, tum ad frastinam, to move, Cic. Or. 2, 17. verba, (ut telum) to throw out, Cic.
